Who should get the CIE certification?

Do you work in the world of indoor air quality (IAQ)? The Council-certified Indoor Environmentalist (CIE) is the most popular indoor air quality certification—if you investigate air quality problems such as mould, VOCs, allergens, dampness, poor ventilation and sick building syndrome.

The CIE certification demonstrates to your clients that you:

- Excel at diagnosing, resolving and preventing common IAQ problems
- Understand how a building's HVAC system can control (and cause) IAQ problems. Incorporate the full spectrum of contaminants into your IAQ assessments, which may include mould, bacteria, VOCs, carbon monoxide, radon, triggers to asthma, allergies and more
- Apply current industry guidelines
- Comprehend the fundamentals of building science. Use IAQ instruments and equipment to measure contaminants. The certification is designed for environmental consultants, HVAC professionals, property inspectors, industrial hygienists, restoration contractors and others working in fields related to IAQ.

Who should get the CMI certification? Are you looking to get certified to do mould inspections? The most reputable mould certifications in the marketplace come from the American Council of Accredited Certification (ACAC). Join us in Newcastle to prepare for the Council-certified Microbial Investigator (CMI) designation.

The CMI/C certification will demonstrate to your clients that you:

- Understand when, where and why mould and bacteria will grow
- Recognise the effects that mould and bacteria may have on health
- Assess indoor environments in a comprehensive manner, rather than just collecting samples.
- Comprehend how to diagnose microbial problems and write plans for them to be resolved
- Apply industry standards of care to your work.

After finishing our prep. course, you can take the ACAC certification exam at computerised testing centres—in all Capital Cities.
